1780s

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Decade Years</th>
<th>Decade Summary</th>
<th>Decade Key Event</th>
<th>Decade Snapshot</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 1780s        | In 1787, Lord Sydney (1733–1800) of the British Colonial Office in Great Britain gave instructions to Governor Arthur Phillip (1738–1814) to establish a penal colony on the Dutch-named land, New Holland. He was also ordered to open friendly communications with the local Indigenous peoples and encourage the convicts and marines to show them kindness. His instructions required giving protection to Indigenous people and to punish those that harmed them. There is no evidence of any acknowledgement of Indigenous peoples' ownership of the land. At this time, the Indigenous population of Australia is estimated to have been approximately between 500,000 and 750,000 people. The size and distribution of populations will always be an informed estimate. There were more than 250 distinct language groups across Australia, each group with their own land, language and culture. The First Fleet left England on 13 May 1787, comprising a flotilla of ships with convicts and marines. There were nine ships and two naval vessels, with enough supplies to keep the 759 convicts, their marine guards, some with families, and a few civil officers, until the colony became self-sufficient. Since the War of American Independence (1775–83), Great Britain wanted an alternative place to 'transport' its convicts. Captain Cook (1728–1779) had reported that the land was lush, well watered and fertile, suitable for growing all types of foods and providing grazing for cattle. In 1788, the life of the Eora people, living near the harbour they called Warrang, were about to change forever with the arrival of the First Fleet. The Cadigal people of the Eora nation are the original occupants of the Sydney region. Once they encountered the foreigners they realised that the | History and Politics
- The First Fleet
- Colonisation
- Cultural differences
- First attempts at communication
Society and Culture
- Survival
- The smallpox epidemic
- Norfolk Island
Science and Technology
- William Dawes and Patyegarang
- Naturalists of the First Fleet
- Explorers
January
- Captain Arthur Phillip and the First Fleet sailed into Port Jackson.
- The wife of Sergeant Thomas Whittle of the marines gave birth to the first non-Indigenous child born in the colony.
February
- The first female convicts arrived at Port Jackson.
- The Court of Criminal Justice Jurisdiction sat for the first time in the colony.
March
- Lieutenant Philip Gidley King took formal possession of Norfolk Island.
June
- All of the cattle that arrived on the First Fleet stray from the settlement. (Some of the animals were still being found seven years later.)
November
- A colonial settlement was established at Rose Hill.
December
- Governor Philip ordered the capture of Aranbanoo, a Cadigal man, to teach him Cadigal language and customs. | intruders had come to stay, so they fought to survive, to retain their land, and their cultural identity.

After arriving at Botany Bay, the First Fleet deemed it to be unsuitable for settlement so they moved north arriving at Port Jackson. Phillip raised the British flag at Sydney Cove on 26 January 1788, taking possession of the land through the British law of Terra Nullius, meaning 'land belonging to no-one'. Indigenous peoples' lores were not considered and they were left with no rights. Their rich, diverse and complex lifestyles were not understood or acknowledged. For some people, the date 26 January is also known as 'Invasion' or 'Survival Day' for this reason.

From the start the colony was beset with problems. Very few convicts knew how to farm and the soil around Sydney Cove was poor. Everyone, from the convicts to Captain Phillip, was on rationed food. Contrary to Cook's reports, they found a hot, dry, infertile country unsuitable for the small farming necessary to make the settlement self-sufficient.